

PRESS RELEASE

19th - 27th June 2009
Cambridge School of Art
FdA Photography Degree Exhibition

Photography Foundation Degree students graduating from Cambridge School of Art in 2009, are proud to present "Exposure37", an exhibition of photography featuring work spanning a range of genres and subject matter.

This free exhibition is being held at the 'Ruskin Gallery', Anglia Ruskin University, Cambridge and is open to the public from Friday 19th June until Sunday 28th June 2009. The exhibition showcases the work of the photography students working in genres including fashion, portrait, documentary, landscape, concept and social photography. Exhibits will employ a variety of media including traditional film photography, digital imaging and video.

Raymond Tomin, Senior Lecturer at Cambridge School of Art is delighted to curate the exhibition, "The work in this exhibition reflects the wide range of interests and differing approaches to photography present within this group but what they all have in common is a passion for photography, coupled with the skills and attitude to create some really exciting work. These graduates demonstrate a high degree of professionalism in their approach to practice, with many already building professional profiles."

The Cambridge School of Art has a proud 150 year history of artistic learning and of exhibiting the work of some of the most promising talent in the UK today.

The gallery will be open to the public between Friday 19th to Sunday 28th June. Opening times will be:

Monday - Friday:	10 am - 9 pm
Saturday:	10 am - 5 pm
